They do business a little different in Chattanooga from what is done here, according to the following from the Times, of Wednesday: "Yesterday the first faint mutterings of the battle of the wharfs were wafted on the breeze and some warning given of the struggle that will ensue. The steamer Dugger brought in a cargo of corn amounting to 3000 bushels. As soon as she arrived the question arose where her grain would be landed. At once the contest began between the competing wharfmen and developed into a question of who would bid the highest. The market value of corn is 56 cents; the new wharfers bid 564, and the old wharfers raised 2 cent. The bidding continued, and the grain was finally bid in for the new wharf at 62 cents, 6 cents above the A SHARP shyster's game to annoy a steamer is shown up in the following from the New Orleans Times-Democrat, of Wednesday: "Last trip the Ed Richardson was sued before United States Commissioner Hunt by Ben Kane.
